WORLD'S GREAT MERCHANT.

Marshall Field, of Chicago,
Expires in New York.

WAS WORTH $200,000,000.

Brave Fight Against Disease
Despite His Seventy Years.

New York, Jan. 16.—Marshall Field, of Chicago, millionaire merchant and a leader in the dry goods trade of the world, died at the Holland House in this city at 4 o'clock this afternoon after an illness extending over more than a week, beginning with a bad cold and developing quickly into pneumonia which affected both lungs. Mr. Field, although 70 years of age, made a fight against the disease which impressed the attending physicians as being braver and stronger than would have been expected of a man many years his junior.

Mrs. Field and other members of the family were with him when he lapsed into the period of unconsciousness which ended in death.

Wonderful Success.

Chicago, Jan. 16.—Marshall Field has been without question the greatest and most successful merchant of his generation and he was one of the world's richest men, his wealth being estimated at anything from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. He was a native of Conway, Mass., where he was born in 1835. His father was a farmer and Mr. Field obtained his education in the public schools of Conway. At the age of 17 he became a clerk in a general country store in Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained for four years. He came to Chicago in 1856 and began his career in this city as clerk in the wholesale dry goods establishment of Colley, Wadsworth & Co. During the four years he remained with this house he showed marked commercial ability and in 1860 he was given a partnership. The late Levi Z. Leiter was also connected with the firm, and in 1865 the two young men withdrew and, in company with Potter Palmer, they organized the firm of Field, Palmer & Leiter, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Palmer withdrew and the firm became Field, Leiter & Co. This continued until 1881, when Mr. Leiter retired and the firm became known as Marshall Field & Co., as it is today. The house forged to the front very rapidly and it is now the largest enterprise of its kind in the world, having numerous branches throughout Europe and Asia.

The greatest merchant in the world was a slender man of medium height. When he looked up his face was kindly and the clear gray eyes shot keen, penetrating glances out from under the shaggy eyebrows. The gray hair was sparse around the forehead, and the heavy mustache was perfectly white. His presence was impressive; he was dignified but not severe; alert but seemingly sad; strong but sympathetic, business-like but considerate of the feelings of others. These were said to be the secrets of his success. He never gave a note; he never bought stock on margins; he never borrowed; he bought for cash and never gave over sixty days' credit. Mr. Field's home in Prairie avenue, near Twentieth street, is massive, but unostentatious.

In politics he never interfered, although he was always ready to aid with time and money any movement looking towards better National and municipal government. He was several times offered the second place on the ticket, but refused to accept it.

Mr. Field was twice married, his first wife having died several years ago. Mr. Field left one child, Ethel, now married and residing in Leamington, England. Marshall Field, Jr., accidentally shot himself at his home in this city Nov. 22, 1905, and died five days later. Sept. 5, 1905, Mr. Field was married in London, England, to Mrs. Caton, the widow of Arthur Caton, of this city.

NEW CLUB ORGANIZED

Composed of About Thirty
Young Men of the City.

NAME NOT DECIDED ON.

Suite of Handsome Rooms
in Cooper Block
Rented.

A new social society was organized last Tuesday night. This club is the successor of the old Kenton Club, and, including about seventeen of the late Kenton Club, the organization now numbers thirty or more.

Officers were chosen as follows: Lawson Flack, President. David Morgan, Vice Pres. Carleton Galbreath, Sec. & Treas. Directors: Guy Starling, J. D. Russell, Jr., and John Harvey.

The selection of a name was deferred until the next meeting.

The Club has rented a suite of rooms in the Cooper block on Main street and a committee will begin at once making necessary changes and fitting up the rooms in handsome style.

The furniture of the old Kenton Club has been purchased and no pains will be spared to make the home of the club all that can be desired. A bath room, reading room and lounging room will be furnished and the young men will have a cozy place where they can enjoy a social hour or two at any time they feel inclined.

At the next meeting a constitution and by-laws, as well as a name, will be presented and adopted. New names will be presented for membership and it is expected that the existence of the club will begin with a membership roll of about fifty.

WANTS DIVORCE.

Plaintiff Sues for Legal Separation from Young Wife

Geo. W. St. John vs. Verna St. John, is the style of a suit for divorce filed here this week. The plaintiff states that they were married in Stewart County, Tenn., in January, 1903, but came at once to this State and lived together until May the same year, at which time defendant left plaintiff and returned to Tennessee, where she remained until about two months ago, when she moved to Trigg county.

Plaintiff further states that he treated the defendant well and provided for her, but she stated to him that she made a mistake in marrying him and did not nor could not love him, and therefore could not live with him, and that she would not live with a man she could not love and respect as a husband. The defendant was only seventeen years old when she married.

WILL GODFREY'S LAST LEAP.

It was a sultry afternoon in the middle of August. The hot air, which had a slight haze, hung like a transparent curtain of light and heat. The couch on which Will Godfrey had lain ever since his hunting accident in the spring had a view of a flower garden richly decked with scarlet and gold, and beyond it of the sun-seared park, where oaks, elms and chestnuts spread great branches, and in the timeless glow of late summer. The deer were huddled together in the shade; there was little sign of stirring life, all nature seemed asleep.

The doctor was sitting near Will. His eyes at the present moment were so full of sorrow that he dared not raise them. There had been a consultation that morning with a great London surgeon, and the result was supposed to be favorable—life might be prolonged under certain conditions.

Will was a man of almost gigantic build. He looked like Goliath laid low. Goliath dying by inches instead of by one swift stroke from his own sword.

"How long will this go on, doctor?" he said abruptly, looking at his friend with great wistful eyes. The doctor did not speak for a moment. He raised his eyes; but not to his patient's face; they were dazed round the room, the walls of which were full of pictures of hunting scenes.

There was a certain monotony about the subject—horses everywhere in various attitudes. In front of the couch, just on a level with Will's eyes, was the Derby. A little further on to the left was another picture of an accident in the hunting field—a man lying on his back with his neck broken and a horse standing over him.

"How long will this go on?" he repeated, insistently.

"It may be for months—even for years. You are suffering from creeping paralysis, but that is often very slow."

"There is no hope of recovery, not even of partial recovery, doctor?"

"God knows I wish there were; that's one of the hardest parts of a doctor's life, the being unable to more than patch up a magnificent frame like yours."

"There was a rabbit once, half-killed and quivering—we knocked it on the head and put it out of its pain; we didn't feed it to prolong the anguish. And the very horse which fell upon me, whose legs were broken, was shot that very hour; it wasn't left to linger. Man is less cruel than God. Man understands—God does not."

"Hush!" said the doctor, gently. He was a man of great reverence of thought and feeling.

"You have something to comfort you," he added, after a pause; "there is your wife. Some men in your condition are left to hired nurses. I never saw anyone so eager to find new ways of cheering you. She was asking me to-day about chess; she wishes me to teach her the game."

Evelyn Godfrey came in at that moment, a beautiful woman with a singularly young, girlish face and an extraordinary expression of vitality. She was pale, with a soft, creamy paleness, and had black eyebrows and intensely gray, black fringed eyes.

She waited till the doctor had gone and then knelt down and stroked his hand.

"I was thought an idle man, wasn't I, Lyn?" he said, softly, smiling at her—oh, what a sad smile it was—but it made a business of sport and active games; there was no season of the year when time hung heavy on my hands. There was hunting in the winter and early spring, fly fishing in May, grouse shooting in August, partridge and pheasant shooting afterward, and between while golf."

"Doesn't it hurt you to talk about it?" said Lyn, with a break in her voice.

"No—it's the only comfort I have. I never knew I had such a strong imagination. I shut my eyes and see the very scenes where I have been so happy—the golf links, the meet at the cross-roads, the moor, the covers—but some times all the pictures run into one another like a kaleidoscope."

"Shall I read to you?" said Lyn, gently.

"No—talk to me. You're a good woman, Lyn, aren't you?"

"I don't know," she answered, tremulously. "I was a very happy woman—till last spring."

"Do you know what I said to the doctor?"

She shook her head.

"I spoke of a rabbit that had been wounded to death, whose condition was hopeless. I said if I saw that animal he would immediately put it out of its pain; he would be thought a brute if he didn't. The mere brutes are better off than men—they're not allowed to live when existence means torture. And yet the two cases can't be compared for suffering."

The brute has a certain amount of physical pain, but that's all; it has no imagination to paint pictures of never-to-be-had again delight, no highly-strung nerves to increase its agony tenfold."

"But the mere brute isn't taken care of, nursed tenderly," said Lyn.

"That's only a refinement of cruelty when there's no hope. Little woman," he went on, gravely looking at her with very kind eyes, "you married a strong man, fond of sport, full of the joy of living, to whom life meant health and strength and a roaring good time; this cripple lying on a stretcher is really a stranger to you."

"Oh, don't say that," she cried, imploringly, stretching out her hands.

"I must be true. I'm a stranger to myself. I can't imagine myself chained to this stretcher, unable to move without pain. It's not Will Godfrey who is lying here—no, Will Godfrey is the man I think about in my dreams, leaping the ditches on a chill spring morning, or marching over the grouse moors with a gun—not this corpse of a man dead to everything he loved."

"But am I nothing to you?" sobbed poor Lyn, who felt that her cup of anguish was indeed full.

"I'm not, so to say, a good man," Will went on, dreamily. "Church-going bored me, and that's the truth. I went because you liked it, darling, and because it was the right thing for the squire at Hall to do, and all that, but I was profoundly bored. I've nothing to cheer me now. I mean nothing irreverent, though perhaps it does not bear speaking about, but if I thought I was going anywhere where they'd understand—if I thought I was going to be sorry for me, and make me happy in a way that I care about—if I might even go on dreaming about the sport; things are decidedly real in a dream, Lyn. I've just night I saw the meet clear and distinct—the bare trees and the hedges standing out against a yellowish sky—and I was coming up with the rest, tearing, galloping in a mad sort of way—and it was real, Lyn, was much more than this."

At that moment the two were interrupted by the entrance of Priscilla Stainforth, Will's aunt, his mother's sister. She was a terrible woman, with a genius for administering spiritual consolation to her relations and friends at supreme moments in their lives.

With the best of motives, she made herself extremely objectionable, and in times of trouble and difficulty was avoided like the plague. She had called very often for the purpose of seeing Will, but had been refused admission. On the present occasion she entered the bedroom uninvited and advanced to the couch.

There had been no time to make any preparations for her arrival. The table was strewn with papers of a sporting character, a yellow-backed novel lay on the pillow.

"Will, I could not restrain myself; I was obliged to come," she said, with an almost piteous earnestness. "You are my own sister's child. Could I ever forgive myself if I neglected my duty toward you at such a time? You have led a selfish, pleasure-seeking life, but it's not too late to seek for mercy." She paused and looked at Evelyn. "Where is your Bible?" she said, sorrowfully. "I see sporting papers in profusion, but not the one book which will give your husband comfort. The river of death is very near, Will," she went on solemnly; "it flows at the bottom of the valley. Soon you will be at the margin. I hear the time is prolonged in which to prepare for the crossing. I beseech you to use it well."

"Go away, Aunt Priscilla," said Evelyn, fiercely. "Go away—leave him to me. Will, do you remember father?"

Will looked at his wife, and his face lighted up.

"He was a good man, a saint upon earth. There's no one could throw a stone at father. I am the youngest and quite different from all the rest, and people said I was fast because I liked hunting and sports of all kinds, and some one spoke to father and said that it was a scandal that an Evangelical clergyman's daughter should care for such things. And father?"

Evelyn's voice broke—"he took me into his study—I was just 17 then—and he made me tell him just how I felt and he said I had my grandfather's blood in my veins. (Grandfather had lived in the bush, and that was where father was born.) And father said it would be cruel to stifle all the desires and instincts which were mine by nature, and he saved up and bought me a horse, and as you know, I used to go to the meets, and it was there I met you, Will."

She paused a moment, out of breath, trying to connect the right words for the many thoughts which crowded in.

"I want to try to remember what father said—the very words; they were something like this: He said he could understand because he was my father, and that was why God understood. He knows all about us through and through, and He wishes us to be our best selves, as we are. You are a sportsman and an outdoor man, and He cares for you like that and He'll make you happy in your own way, not in some one else's way. And you don't want any reaching about some things. You don't want to be trained not to be cruel or to give needless pain. You're a sportsman every inch of you, and there'll be something for you to do—I swear it; you may be taught other things, but you'll have that. You won't have crushed out of you what makes you yourself. You are not responsible any more than I am responsible. He cares, He understands!"

After that Will lay quite still with his eyes half closed. In a few minutes he was fast asleep, breathing regularly like a child. It was evidently a happy slumber. He was dreaming, and the dream was vivid and intensely real. His lips were curved in an almost joyful smile.

After a short interval he began to speak.

"The mare is fresh to-day, Evelyn," he murmured in his sleep. "This is our first ride together since my accident. Oh, it's good to be well!"

"Yes," she answered, in a low, clear voice, which had a ring of laughter in it. "It's good to be riding again, you and I on the Black Princess and I on the Star."

But the radiant look vanished, a shadow crossed her husband's face like the wing of a dark cloud. His Aunt Priscilla's words were evidently haunting him.

"The river," he murmured, in a distressed tone of voice, "I'm close to it now."

"Leap it," she cried, suddenly. "You can do it, I'm certain. Why, I could do it, Will!"

Only for an instant did Will hesitate. Then his expression changed to a joyous ecstasy of resolve.

"By Jove! I'll have a try, Lyn," he whispered, stiff in his sleep.

He raised his head with eager expectancy, his left hand was out stretched, grasping invisible reins.

His pulse gave one tremendous bound. It was the last. His head fell quietly back—his left hand relaxed its hold. His lips still smiled! It was a smile of triumph.

Will Godfrey had leaped—London Unlooker.

Of Waverly, Tex., writes: "Of a morning, when first arising, I often find a troublesome collection of phlegm which produces a cough and is very hard to dislodge; but a small quantity of Ballard's Horehound Syrup will at once dislodge it, and the trouble is over. I know of no medicine that is equal to it, and it is so pleasant to take, I can most cordially recommend it to all persons needing assistance in such a case, or lung trouble." Bloodhounds a Strong Witness Against Bellington.

Officers W. H. Nixon's bloodhounds played a star part in the capture of Sander Bellington, the negro in jail on a charge of stealing $7 from Wm. Alexander the other night. The leader of the dogs took the trail at Mr. E. M. Flack's cabin, where Alexander lived, and went straight to Mr. W. T. Tandy's back gate. When let in the gate he went up the steps leading to Bellington's room. Alexander claimed to have lost seven silver dollars. Five silver dollars and forty cents in change was found in Bellington's room and he had 75 cents in his pockets. He was held over.

The Difference.

However, we extend the right hand of friendship to our worthy rival and hope she may soon be able to make a better showing of her prosperity.

The new bank, at Main and Ninth streets, is to have marble counters, which is something in the way of an innovation here.

It's no trouble to tell a policeman now, since they are wearing helmets and stripes down their pant legs, which looks so much more "cityfied."

It may be said that a road will be built from the I. C. to the L. & N. depots just as positively as the sun will rise to-morrow.

Spring dress goods are being displayed in the dry goods show windows. We haven't had much winter so far, and this looks a little anticipatory.

Mr. Frank Hoge is recovering from his illness and hopes to be down town in a few days. He has had pleurisy and has been from his place of business several weeks.

Our people have had readings, slight of hand performances, drawing etc., this winter, and are now hungry for music and they will get it tomorrow night—and of the finest!

The Louisville papers are boasting of that city's large per centage of improvements over cities of approximate size in the Union. We would like to size up Hopkinsville with other cities of our class in Kentucky.

It is said there will be two or three pretty new cottages built on West Nineteenth street in the early spring. This is one of the prettiest streets in town, and especially so right now as it was not torn up by the sewerage workers.

Mr. John Ferguson has gone to Henderson to accept the responsible position of foreman of the Journal office there. His family will join him the first of next week. Mr. Ferguson is a good boy and a good printer, and will no doubt make the Journal a valuable man.

Rev. M. F. Ham is to start about the first of February to the Holy Land. Mr. Ham's health has not been good for some time and he wants to visit Palestine and familiarize himself with different historic points and stand on the ground where Christ stood. His friends here wish him a safe trip and restoration to health.

The City Bank will move back into its old stand, which has been made new, in a few days and it is said the Bank of Hopkinsville will at once vacate its building, moving into the one the City Bank has been occupying temporarily, and work will begin right away on the bank building and when the repairs are completed no banking institution in the State will have any handsomer quarters than the Bank of Hopkinsville.

Comes to Crofton.

Prof. John D. Cart, who has been teaching school this season at St. Charles, has moved to Crofton and will have charge of the schools there in the future. Prof. Cart is a teacher of much ability and the people of Crofton are fortunate in securing his services.—Hustler.

The disappearance of Mr. Smith is causing some talk in Hopkinsville, but as facts come to light many of his friends believe he was justified and beg the public to withhold opinion.

STATE LAW

Appealed to By Nashville Home Telephone Company.

IGNORES A FRANCHISE

Representative Says Work of Installing System Will Begin This Year.

An officer of the Nashville Home Telephone Company on Saturday made the positive statement that that company would begin the installation of a telephone system in Nashville during the present year, and that in the central part of the city its wires would be put in the same excavation with the other wires of the city. It had made persistent efforts to secure a franchise from the city, but both the bills granting it a franchise, which were introduced in the City Council, were rejected. The company desired to treat the Council with due deference by pursuing the course commonly pursued by companies proposing to establish utilities, such as a telephone plant, in the city, and, therefore, applied to it for a franchise, or rather asked to submit the question of granting it a franchise to the qualified voters of the city.

Now that its efforts to secure a franchise from the Council by legitimate means had proved unavailing it proposed to establish a telephone plant in Nashville without further dickerings with the Council, and within a period of two years it expected to install 6,000 telephones in this city. The company considered it had a legal right to install a telephone plant in Nashville and it is believed that no person, natural or artificial, could legally prevent it from accomplishing its purpose.

It is believed the company proposes to install a plant in Nashville under the law passed by the Legislature in 1885, which confers on telephone companies a right to construct, operate and maintain telephone lines "along and over the public highways and streets of the cities and towns of this State, or across and under the waters, and over any lands or public works belonging to this State, and on and over the lands of private individuals, and upon, along and parallel to any of the rail roads or turnpikes of this State, and on and over the bridges, trestles or structures of said railroads." It is said that already twenty-two telephone exchanges are operated in towns of Tennessee under this law.—American.

The funeral services of the late Dr. William M. Hill were largely attended last Tuesday afternoon. Rev. H. D. Smith, at the request of Dr. Hill's short time before his death, was assisted by Dr. W. Grass Fire.

A fire alarm was turned in early last Monday night. Sparks from the engine of a passing train had set the grass on fire in a field belonging to Mr. John B. Trice. The fire was put out after a hard fight. Mr. Trice, his excitement, ran a rock pile and had a pretty severe fall.

You see 3 cents buys 3 full-headed, perfect cheroots.—Five-cent cigars with the heads cut off.

It's the little you miss had that takes more time to make than the four here,—and that's what makes a cigar cost you 15 cents instead of 5 cents.

You can pay 15 cents for three cigars with the heads on,—but why should you when 5 cents will buy three cigars of substantially as good quality with the heads cut off? First thing you do is to clip the head off, anyway.

OLD VIRGINIA

CHEROOTS

Package of 3 for 5c.

(A cheroot is a cigar made without the head)

The fragrant filler of the Old Virginia Cheroot is blended from short leaves and selected clippings, of fine domestic leaf,—developed and refined by a long process before they reach the factory.

There is only one way that such tobacco can be worked up into cheroots at the price of 5 cents for 3.

—And that one way is the modern systematic method which produces Old Virginia Cheroots—a million of them every day—under the perfect system of the biggest, best-equipped, cleanest cigar-factory in the world.

DIVIDEND PAYING Oil and Mining Stocks,

Other high grade per cent. guaranteed interest preferred stocks and bonds for sale. OSAGE OIL, well No. 11, Lease 67, has been brought in during the month as an oil well equal to any on the lease and is now a good producer. Well No. 12, Lease 67, has been drilled and is flowing well. This makes 11 wells independent of No. 12 on lease 67, owned by the four companies, drilled with a single "dry hole."

The four Osage Oil Companies owning the above wells have returned to stock holders during the year in monthly dividends, the sum of $500,000, and not an actual investment in property, and development of approximately $600,000, with a handsome surplus yet remaining in the profit fund & extra dividends, subject to the action of the stockholders at their annual meeting, to be held in January.

Withdrawal of all stocks of the four companies have been entirely withdrawn from the market. An announcement will probably be made no later than January 15, of the entire withdrawal from the market of the stock of the Interstate Osage Petroleum Co., which will begin—dividends in January at the same rate as the other four Osage Petroleum Companies. This Company has demonstrated by its four wells already brought in that it has an existing & partly, with development, equal if not in excess of the four Osage Petroleum Companies first operating in the Bartlesville District and it has a surplus in its profit fund of practically $100,000 at the present time available for dividends. Any customer desiring to secure this stock will have to send in their subscriptions prior to the date of the withdrawal.

The Interstate Osage Petroleum Co. now has in its profit fund approximately $300,000 against an investment in the property and development of some of less than $25,000, which we think a remarkable record for the Osage properties for 1905.

The wretched condition of the streets is much improved by the high winds and sunshine of the last few days. A force of workmen has been kept busy scraping up the mud and hauling it off. TWO HUNDRED BUSINESS MEN

Are Wanted To Organize Chamber of Commerce

MANY HAVE SIGNED.

Discussion Of A President Is Already Going On

The phenomenal success of the movement for a reorganization of the Commercial Club, or rather the organization of a Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade, has brought to the surface some interesting developments. Perhaps the question arousing most interest is, who is to be the President of the new organization. The universal opinion is that a young man should be elected. From present indications the organization will begin its existence with from 200 to two hundred and fifty members. As these members are the most substantial citizens of Hopkinsville, the honor of being President of the body carries with it a distinction that would naturally be highly prized by any one. Among those most frequently mentioned for president are R. M. Fairleigh J. T. Edmunds, Ross A. Rogers and F. K. Yots. R. E. Cooper is the favorite of a large number but Mr. Cooper is understood to have said that he positively would not serve other than as a high private.

J. B. Mallon seems to have the united support of the railway contingent. Since the organization has become an assured success, interest in the presidency is rising rapidly and if all signs do not fail very pretty fight is in prospect before the matter is finally settled. The president will have the appointment of committees. These committees make reports which are generally adopted by the organization. As the organization represents an overwhelming majority of the business interests its recommendations will "go," whether in reference to trade, municipal affairs, or what not.

Mr. Stanley Creswell, who is working up the movement, is a hustling and experienced man in such work and already has more than 100 applications for membership. The annual dues will be $6, payable one half when the chamber or club is formally organized.

Mr. Garland Cooper is spoken of for secretary.

HELEN'S BROTHER.

Anyone would have looked twice at the girl who was coming through the big gates of the railway station to-day with several hundred other people who had just got off a train from the west. She was a symphony in golden brown and from her hat to her hem of her smart tailor skirt and including the suitcase she carried she matched to the hair's-breadth of a shade. Moreover, her eyes matched her clothing and she was pink and white and rather excited.

Once apart from the crowd she hesitated a moment, her eyes sweeping the bystanders. Suddenly she caught the glance of a good-looking young man who wore a violent crimson tie and button shoes, and who was most patiently waiting. She beamed so relievedly that he was unconsciously stopped forward as she fluttered down upon him.

"Oh," cried the girl in brown, "I just knew it was you the instant I saw you! Helen said when she wrote to tell me why she couldn't meet me that she'd send her brother Dick. She told me so much about you and she said I couldn't help knowing you because you were such dreadful tips. I beg your pardon, of course you're not at all dreadful, but red, you know."

"Oh, don't mention it!" begged the young man as she struggled in embarrassment. "I'm always getting embarrassed myself!"

"How do you do?" cried the girl in brown. "I'm just crazy to see the dear thing! Just think! We haven't set eyes on each other since we were graduates last June! I think it was perfectly lovely of her to invite me in to spend the holidays and she's planned so many delightful things to do. And it is so good to see you here, too! Actually, Helen said the praises of her brother so much at school that we girls used to get tired of you. That is, we didn't know you, of course, because we didn't know you—but of hearing about you. That sounds impudent, I know, but I don't mean—"

"Oh, I understand!" said the young man, hastily. He seemed fascinated, but uncomfortable. "Don't you think we'd better be starting?" asked the girl. GREAT CROWDS.

The Methodist Revival Continues to Grow In Interest.

This is the second week of "the big meeting" at the Methodist church, and a big meeting it is. Every night the large auditorium is packed to its utmost capacity—in fact, if you want a seat you have to be there long before 7 o'clock. The morning prayer services are largely attended and have proven very helpful. Mr. Davis is a man of wonderful enthusiasm and it is a wonder how he bears up under his great mental and physical strain. He is delivering some great messages to the unconverted and strengthening and building up the members of the church and inspiring them to a more strenuous Christian life.

RECITAL AT B. F. C.

Classes In Expression to Entertain Jan. 26.

The classes in Expression and Physical Culture, of Bethel College, will give a recital in the chapel hall at eight o'clock, Friday evening, Jan. 26. This is the first entertainment that has been given by these departments for some time. Under the direction of Miss Susong both departments are doing good work, and the program promises to be quite entertaining. There will be no admission charged and all the friends of the school are invited to be present.

BUSY MONTH.

Tobacco Factory Getting Behind Filling Orders.

The business of the R. T. Martin Greenville Tobacco Manufacturing Company is quite heavy at this time. In fact, the company is getting considerably behind with orders. This is usually the dull season, but orders have been pouring in every day this year, and, while the factory is running with a good force, the output does not supply the demand. Their brands are becoming more popular every day, and their tobaccos are sold in more than half the States in the Union.

Three of a Kind.

Hon. John C. Duffy, of Hopkinsville, was in the city yesterday. Mr. Duffy is a Democrat and was recently elected county attorney of Christian county by a majority of one vote. Christian county is normally Republican by at least a thousand, but some time last fall the young Democrats made an alliance with some liberal Republicans on a fusion ticket, which won out, electing Frank Rives, State Senator, Herman Southall, Representative, and John Duffy County Attorney, a trio of young Democrats that would be hard to beat.—State Journal.

Henderson Hit Hard.

Considerable damage was done by the windstorm Monday afternoon and Tuesday night in Western Kentucky. In Henderson county alone the losses are estimated to be in the neighborhood of $30,000. Great damage was also done in Indiana, and at least two lives were lost.

TOUR OF OBSERVATION.

Local Members Are On the Committees On Charitable Institutions.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 17.—The House committees are busy considering the various contests from Louisville. The testimony is so voluminous that much of it cannot even be read.

A great many bills continue to pour into the legislative hoppers of both houses, but the actual work has not yet begun.

The joint committee on Charitable Institutions determined today to make a round of inspection of the different insane hospitals, leaving Frankfort Monday afternoon or Monday evening. The committee will leave Louisville over the Louisville and Nashville for Hopkinsville at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning, arriving in Hopkinsville at 9:45 a. m. After spending the day at the hospital they will leave at 5:18 p. m., arriving in Louisville during the night. They will leave for the hospital at Lakeland at 7 o'clock, to meet there at 10, and will return to Frankfort in the afternoon. The Senate committee on Charitable Institutions is made up of Senators Ben Johnson, chairman; J. P. Chinn, Frank Rives, R. R. Grady, R. L. Hubble, W. E. Whitte, R. W. Owen, J. W. Newman and E. P. M. Redwine.

KENNEDY PLAYERS.

Will Be At Opera House One Week, Beginning Monday.

Mr. Ennis has secured the Kennedy Players for a solid week, beginning next Monday night. Press Notices from every section speak in the highest terms of the company. Monday night a lady will be admitted with each reserved seat ticket, provided tickets are secured before 6 o'clock Monday evening. Prices have been fixed at 10-20 and 30 cents.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our thanks to our friends in Empire for their many kindnesses to our beloved nephew, Berry Burrus, during the interval from the time of his injury last Thursday up to his death, and to our friends in Hopkinsville for their sympathy and aid. Lanham, Md., as follows:

"Though somewhat averse to patent medicines, and still more averse to becoming a professional affidavit man, it seems only a plain duty in the present instance to add my experience to the columns already written concerning the curative powers of Peru-na.

"I have been particularly benefited by its use for colds in the head and throat. I have been able to fully cure myself of a most severe attack in forty-eight hours by its use according to directions. I use it as a preventive whenever threatened with an attack.

"Members of my family also use it for like ailments. We are recommending it to our friends."—C. W. Bowman.

Peru-na Contains no Narcotics. One reason why Peru-na has found permanent use in so many homes is that it contains no narcotic of any kind. It can be used any length of time without acquiring a drug habit.

THE FAD FOR FENCING

By AUBREY NEWTON

(Copyright, 1905, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Dear Stan: There's not a word of truth in it, as I telegraphed you, and don't read the papers. If you could see the headlines: "What the New Woman's Fad for Fencing is Leading To," and the fencers dragged into it, and my picture in fencing clothes, oh, don't look at a single paper until I tell you!

To begin with, why did you leave me? Why did you leave me in the care of your "dear little chum?"

Early Tuesday morning he sent over from the hospital with a note asking me to go with him to see "Sherlock Holmes." Well, so went.

There's lots of high lights and lots of inky darkness in that play, and it's a play where you want to watch the stage every minute, but right in front of us sat Amy Wilmot. You remember she was the girl who fenced with me in the tournament last spring, the one who was so angry with the fencers for something Crawford said about a foul thrust. She's gone on the stage, and is to lead in a new company.

She wore a black hat with three enormous plumes, so that neither Herbert nor I could see at all, and we couldn't change our seats, and she refused to take it off.

Finally Herbert wrote on the margin of his programme: "How much longer are we going to stand it?" And I wrote back: "If I had a pair of scissors I'd cut them off."

Well, just then the lights were turned down in the house and on the stage, and I felt Herbert lay something heavy and cold in my hand—a huge pair of cartilage scissors, that he had in his pocket when he left the hospital, I suppose.

"Dear you," he whispered.

Now comes the horrible part. Stanley, you know I never could take a dare. I didn't mean to cut off her feathers—I wouldn't do such a thing. I only meant to pretend. I lifted the scissors—in the dark, you know—and opened them close to the feathers and the deadly things must have been razors. Before I knew it—Stan, I'd have given my life to put those feathers back. But there they were, light and long and curling, in my hand.

Nobody saw it done. Amy put her hand to her hat as if she felt it had been jostled, but she did not feel that the feathers were gone. Well, Herbert was enchanted and the play went on. We saw very well after that. But I felt—oh, has Herbert written to you? He insists on treating it all as a joke.

Finally the play came to an end. Everybody rose to leave the theater, and I touched Amy Wilmot on the arm. "I am very sorry," I said, "but I cut these off accidentally." And I handed her the feathers before Herbert could stop me.

She just stared a moment, and then her hand went up to her hat. I could hear Herbert catch his breath. I can see her face, the bewilderment changing into indignation, the—oh, the everything—the people all began to clap us, dropping their programmes, putting on their wraps, laughing and criticizing the play.

Then Herbert put his ear to and started to take all the blame, but she turned squarely away from him and said to me in a voice choking with rage: "You shall pay dearly for this little joke. I demand an apology!"

"With all my heart," I said. "I feel worse about this than you do."

"You know very well that I am not speaking about the hat," she exclaimed. "I want you to make your fencer's friend—you remember whom—retract what you got him to say against my fencing in the tournament—to retract it in print!"

Then I was angry, Stanley. I drew myself up and said: "I had nothing to do with the judging. Miss Wilmot, but that has nothing to do with this, for which I am horribly sorry, and I'm ready to do anything to prove it."

Miss Wilmot did not lift her head, but she raised her eyes so that they met mine squarely. "Are you prepared," she asked, "to try that counterthrust over again without the buttons on the sword?"

"Hold on," said Herbert; but I put him aside and said: "Whenever you choose."

"Then come here to the theater tomorrow morning at 10:30. I have a rehearsal at 11, and a little practice beforehand will do me good. We shall have the stage to ourselves."

"This is all nonsense," Herbert interrupted. "Miss Whiteside will do no such thing."

"Miss Whiteside is here to speak for herself," I said, angrily. "I will come at 10:30 to-morrow morning, with the greatest pleasure. I think I can demonstrate that parry to your entire satisfaction."

"You understand," she said, smiling for the first time, "that I am not given to little jokes. I have a pair of excellent swords, but if you prefer to select your own—"

"I shall be quite satisfied," I said; "but about the feathers?"

"The gentleman with the scissors may keep them as a souvenir." And she swept down the aisle and went in at the stage-door, behind the prospect boxes.

I believe I've taken up this letter a dozen times.

There's the most awful coming and going in this house. The door-bell does nothing but ring, and while mamma has refused to see anybody, and the reporters can't get beyond Ludwig, there are confounders like Mrs. Spigasse Winter, and the flowers (it's worse than a funeral) that we can't turn away, and I'm sitting up here in my room in disgrace that is a thousand times worse than death.

I wish I could hear from you. It is just evening that I telegraphed. I don't suppose there is anything you could telegraph except that you love me, and I don't suppose it would occur to you to do that.

Crawford of the fencers has just written to me. He is such a trump. He says it's a burning shame it has made such a stir in the papers, but the club is proud of it.

But I have not told you about the duel. At a little before the time appointed, I met Herbert just hurrying to the theater. He led the way into the stage entrance—how dreary it is!—and the doorkeeper told us that Miss Wilmot and Mr. Ditmore had not come, but that she was expecting us.

"What others?" asked Herbert, suspiciously.

"The others Miss Wilmot was expecting," the doorkeeper said.

"I don't like the look of this," said Herbert. "I guess you had better wait until I go in and see what sort of a reception Miss Wilmot is giving."

"But I can't wait out here," I said. "I'm sure I'm invited."

So we both went in. Stan, they were all reporters!

Then Miss Wilmot and Mr. Ditmore came. He was carrying the swords and a suit case, and Herbert had the case in his hand. We all bowed.

I felt horribly foolish. Then Miss Wilmot went to her dressing-room, and I had one assigned to me. I began to get easily, wasn't I, Amy Wilmot, but of what my family would say if they ever found out.

It didn't take me any time to dress, and yet Miss Wilmot was ready before me. Herbert and Mr. Ditmore were measuring the distance and testing the swords, and at last Mr. Ditmore handed them to me to choose from. I took one at random, and he offered the other to Miss Wilmot. It seemed that he was to conduct the duel, of which I was very glad, for he knows all about the etiquette of such things, and I'm pretty certain that Herbert doesn't.

"Ready?" said Mr. Ditmore, holding the points of our swords. He looked from one to the other of us. "Ready," we said. Then he released our sword tips and stepped back.

From that moment every thought of nervousness left me. I felt perfectly at home. The scene of the stage was filling with people, and I realized that it must be time for rehearsal. It came to me vaguely that this crowd was just what we needed, and that I was just what we needed.

For I did not see them, and yet it was a sudden fancy of a resemblance to you among them that caught my attention for the fraction of a moment.

She took the opportunity to make a "coup fourre," which I parried just in time by dropping my hand and chasing her point. Then I placed my point at her heart. I did it so easily and coolly that I drew it back a little, so that she would not run on it. But there it was, for an instant, for all to see. I had not so much as scratched her velvet jacket, and she must have known that I wouldn't dream of hurting her; but she never that was, she gave one cry, that will ring in my ears to my dying day, and dropped to the floor, her sword ringing as it fell beside her.

If it was meant to call attention to herself from my own victory, it was done with a quickness of wit that shows that she will be a great actress, if it was real fear. It played her a splendid turn. I ran to pick her up, and a half dozen others with me, and when we lifted her she was as white as my handkerchief, but she smiled at me and put out her hand, and said, with a perfect show of self-possession: "I see you are bound to have your little joke."

Then I saw Stan. Herbert and I got out, and the rehearsal took place as if nothing had happened, except that Amy Wilmot is now a heroine, and it appears that we are both in danger of being imprisoned. Do you see the blurred places all over this letter? It isn't the blotter, Stan, it's tears.

Now I've told you the whole truth and if you disapprove of my part in it you are free to consider our engagement at an end.

"Come in. What is it? I won't see anybody," I won't! Oh! Oh—Stan—Stan—dear—is it really you?"

AMUSEMENTS.

The Cleveland Ladies Orchestra, which will appear at the Tabernacle this evening is a strong combination. There is not a poor member in the organization and the orchestra is recommended in the strongest terms, the members being artists of rare ability. Read what the Grand Rapids Y. M. C. A. Educational Committee has to say of them:

"We are pleased to report that we had a very pleasant evening with the Cleveland Ladies' Orchestra. You certainly have a strong combination here. There is not a poor member in the organization. Mr. Metzendorf is a hard worker and the people appreciate the results of his efforts. Miss Johnson and Miss Parsons are certainly artists. You need have no hesitation in recommending them in the strongest terms to any one wanting a good attraction for next season. Our people were more than pleased with the presentation last night."

Performance begins at 8 o'clock.

"Babes in Toyland"

"Babes in Toyland" will be the attraction at Holland's Opera House, Feb. 5. Concerning the production at Sioux City recently, the Tribune says:

"Two performances of 'Babes in Toyland' was given at the New Grand Saturday to large audiences. The production is unusually rich in good music and in the main this was creditably given. The lines have many laughs in them and the lyrics are among the cleverest to be found in any of the musical pieces. The song 'I Can't Do the Sum' went with special 'go' and the life insurance stanza was decidedly new. The scenic offering is attractive and there is much to rivet the attention of the children while the big folks are enjoying other efforts a little more pretentious. After 'The Forbidden Land,' 'The Liberty Belles' and 'The Royal Chef' in one week, 'Babes in Toyland' carried us (comparatively) well into 'Joyland.' Arthur Conrad Alan and Marie Fanchonetti as Jane are genuinely good, Grace Hazard is dainty and winsome as Contrary Mary, and Bud Ross, the detective, is a provoker of considerable mirth."

A Week's Engagement.

Kennedy Players, a first class repertoire company, will hold the boards at Holland's Opera House all next week. A different play will be presented each night at popular prices 10, 20 and 30 cents. On Monday, the opening night, a lady will be admitted free with each reserve seat ticket, provided tickets are purchased before 6 p. m. Monday. The company is playing at Bowling Green this week to crowded houses.

25c For Children.
